

MAC LESSON #68

QUICK AREA CODE LOOKUPS IN ADDRESS BOOK

You can use your Tiger Address Book to pull information based on things individual records have in common, like an area code or a Zip code. You can also include street addresses that have the same first three numbers. It's easy, and I know you can find a use for this.

Just type in the area code you're looking for and the search does the rest. Here, your Mac is using Spotlight's search to run the find for the numbers you type; it's not doing a lookup only on area code. So if you have zip codes or street addresses that start with the same three numbers, those records will also show up.
